

Save Information with CD Duplication London

Gone are the days when people listened to music from cassette and CD players. In fact, the arrival of CDs brought about a significant change as they were much less of a hassle as compared to cassettes. However, with passing time even CDs are going out of the way, causing people to reminisce about the days when CDs existed. This is why, CD duplication is gaining repute.

Differentiating between CD Replication and CD Duplication

CD duplication services are increasingly gaining momentum in today's day and age. However, not many people are aware of the large difference that exists between CD duplication and CD replication. Only once you know the difference will you be capable of choosing the right option for you.

Replicating a CD refers to the process when information is added during the course of manufacturing while duplicating a CD on the other hand, is simply the process of burning the information onto a blank CD or DVD. So while the words may be similar, the process used in both cases, is completely different. On duplicating a CD, the final product is usually given the label CD-R or DVD- R. On the other hand, after a CD or DVD has been replicated, it is marked as CD- ROMs or DVD-5, DVD -9 and so on.

How Does CD Duplication work?

The process of CD duplication is basically the same as burning it on your computer. It works by taking data from the main disc and then re-writing this onto a blank disc. The only difference between handling this process at home and getting it done at a CD Duplication company is that our company is equipped to burn numerous CDs simultaneously.

This is done with the help of connected towers, each of which has attached trays for the CDs that are getting discharged as the burning process is being done. However, the process is not complete, until the information that has been copied onto the blank CDs is first verified with the main disc. The only drawback with regard to DVD-R duplicates is that you are not able to put more than 1 layer of information on it.

Why Choose our CD Duplication Services?
